159 of the 2016 Dell Scholars Are AVID Students

Accounts for 45% of 350 national awards

San Diego, CA (April 11, 2016): AVID (Advancement Via Individual Determination), a nationally recognized nonprofit and college-readiness system, announced today that 159 of the 350 2016 Dell Scholars are AVID students. The Dell Scholars Program, an initiative of the Michael & Susan Dell Foundation, selects high school seniors who have overcome significant obstacles to pursue their college education. These Dell Scholars are provided with financial assistance, resources, and mentoring throughout college to ensure that they have ongoing support to succeed in college and obtain a bachelor's degree.

AVID works to close the achievement gap by providing educators with proven strategies that ensure all students have the opportunity to succeed in college, career, and life. Year-after-year, a significant number of AVID students have been chosen as Dell Scholars. With the help of their AVID educators and peers, these students have shown great determination to stay on a college-ready path, taking rigorous courses and building vital academic habits.

Dr. Sandy Husk, CEO of AVID, praised these newest Dell Scholars: "We are extremely proud of these young men and women as they begin their college education. Both AVID and the Dell Scholars Program are dedicated to closing the achievement and opportunity gaps for our students."
